Firefox Phenomenon: Creating High Impact Software

“Blake Ross began his career at 14 with an internship at Netscape. Three years later, he started Firefox to make the web easy to use for normal human beings.

Over 70 million of them have downloaded Firefox to date, jump starting a monopolized and entrenched browser market that was once presumed dead. Blake was recently featured on the cover of Wired for his efforts, and was also nominated for Wired’s top Rave Award, “Renegade of the Year”, opposite the founders of Google.

Blake is currently studying computer science at Stanford as a sophomore. He recently founded a new company with a former Firefox teammate, and won’t rest until using the computer is an absolute pleasure.”
